

A Sense of Belonging

After he lost his best friend alcohol, loneliness set in.
Luckily, he had a sponsor and AA tools to help.

BY: JAKE B. | CHEYENNE, WYOMING

Loneliness is the “L” in the AA slogan H.A.L.T.—one of the four dangerous states that can lead to relapse. In my early days, I understood the other letters: Hungry, Angry and Tired. Those were known feelings for me. But loneliness? I didn’t truly meet loneliness until I got sober. Today, with nine years of recovery, I’ve realized that loneliness wasn’t just a feeling; it was the void I had been trying to drown for years.

When I was drinking, I was “busy.” I lived by the “work hard/play hard” mantra, filling my calendar with college, work, hobbies and exercise. I thought I was thriving. I was a high-functioning and high-production person, fueled by the promise of my nightcap reward. But slowly, the fabric of the foundation for that life began to unravel. My nightly drinks migrated from social settings to the solitude of my couch. I wasn’t feeling lonely yet; I was feeling demoralized. I was angry at my lack of control over my drinking.

I tried to skip a night of drinking, or drink less, but I couldn’t. Eventually, alcohol took everything. I lost the job, the relationships and my sense of self. Yet even in total isolation, I didn’t feel lonely. Why would I? I had my best friend alcohol to keep me company. It was a one-sided relationship that was killing me, but like any abusive relationship, it convinced me I couldn’t survive without it.

My first real encounter with loneliness happened in inpatient treatment. When the fog lifted and the alcohol was gone, the silence was deafening. I couldn’t drink away the discomfort. I had to sit in it. By the end of my 30 days, I became terrified. I didn’t have the tools to handle being alone with my own thoughts.

So I followed the plan: a second month of treatment, a sober house and AA meetings. I was doing all the right things, but I was still white knuckling the “L” in H.A.L.T. I kept busy to stay safe. I thought the cure for loneliness was simply the presence of other people. I was feeling more confident and moved in with a girlfriend—also in early recovery—and felt I had finally outrun the void. Boy, was I wrong.

The relapse happened in a quiet moment. My girlfriend went to work, the

TRADITION TEN: (The Long Form)

“No A.A. group or member should ever, in a way as to implicate A.A., express any opinion on outside controversial issues— particularly those of politics, alcohol reform, or sectarian religion. The Alcoholics Anonymous groups oppose no one. Concerning such matters they can express no views whatever.

TRADITION TEN: Check List

1. Do I ever give the impression that there really is an “AA opinion” on Antabuse? Tranquillizers/ Doctors? Psychiatrists? Churches? Hospitals? Jails? Alcohol? The federal or state government? Legalizing marijuana? Vitamins? Al-Anon? Alateen?
2. Can I honestly share my own personal experience concerning any of those without giving the impression I am stating the “AA opinion”?
3. What in AA history gave rise to our Tenth Tradition?
4. Have I has a similar experience in my own AA life?
5. What would AA be without this Tradition? Where would I be?
6. Do I breach this or any of its supporting Traditions in subtle, perhaps unconscious, ways??
7. How can I manifest the spirit of this Tradition in my personal life outside AA? Inside AA?
8. What has rotation to do with anonymity? With humility?

house was still, and the loneliness moved in like a cold draft. Because I hadn't learned how to be with myself, I sought to escape myself. I turned to alcohol and woke up in a hospital bed, right back where I started. I felt defeated. Despite all my hard work to get sober, I was missing a vital piece of the puzzle.

My sponsor didn't coddle me. He said, "Loneliness is a part of life, and we have to learn to deal with it. The Steps will teach you to be comfortable with yourself and work on a relationship with a Higher Power so that you're never truly alone."

That was a paradigm shift for me. I realized I had been using the Fellowship as a distraction rather than a foundation. To get through the loneliness, I had to develop a relationship with a Higher Power and, perhaps more dauntingly, with myself.

Today, nine years later, my life looks very different, because I treat loneliness with spiritual and practical tools. It begins with my internal world. Through regular meditation and prayer I have cultivated a stillness within myself and a link with my Higher Power. This connection with my Higher Power provides a sense of belonging and contentment that isn't dependent on who's in the room. It is a constant companionship that makes the silence feel full rather than empty.

I have also learned that while my internal foundation must be solid, I cannot stay sober in a vacuum. I stay active in the Fellowship, not to hide from myself, but to be of service and find a deeper sense of oneness with my fellows. I maintain the lines of communication by keeping in touch with my sponsor and peers when things are going well, so those channels are open when things get heavy. I no longer wait for a crisis to reach out. I make the Fellowship a part of my routine. I've discovered that working with others is another helpful tool. When I focus on helping another alcoholic, my own loneliness tends to evaporate, replaced by a sense of purpose and connection to the world.

Today, I'm grateful for the silence I once feared. It's no longer a void to be filled, but a space where I can hear my Higher Power and connect with myself. I've come to realize that for me, loneliness isn't a sign that I'm failing at sobriety; it's simply a signal that it's time to go deeper. By continuing to work the Steps and leaning into the Fellowship, I have watched that "cold draft" slowly transform into a warm, steady light.

Watch What We Say

He thought it was OK to share his politics because he assumed everyone agreed.
Luckily, Chimney Dave didn't.

By: Anonymous | Oslo

I got sober in a small AA meeting in the little town I grew up in. I thought everyone there had the same beliefs I had.

One day, with a few months sober, I was smoking outside our meeting. Like a typical self-righteous, freshly sober, know-it-all 22-year-old, I started spewing out political beliefs. I knew AA had no opinions on outside issues, but I was speaking for myself. I was outside the meeting after all, and most importantly, I knew that everyone else agreed with me.

Right then Chimney Dave spoke up. Chimney Dave never said anything. All I knew about him was that he was 10 years older than me and had 10 more years of sobriety than I did. I admired his quiet resolve and stability, as did everyone else.

"We don't talk about politics in AA," he said. "And we don't all agree with you."

I shut up. But my head was running a mile-a-minute, telling me all the reasons he was a stupid, wrong-faced, not-nice jerk, among other epithets. Eventually I calmed down. I realized that in two brief sentences, he gave me my first real lessons in humility and consideration for others.

When I was a newcomer, my alcoholic mind was always looking for differences—for reasons why I don't belong in a meeting, for reasons I'm different. For me, this was dangerous thinking. I learned that in order to keep AA welcoming, especially to newcomers, it's best for me to keep my opinions to myself. I can't assume that anyone in or around the meeting agrees with my (almost always self-righteous) opinions, especially my opinions about divisive issues. Even when I'm talking about AA, my best bet is to share my experience, not my opinion.

For me, going to meetings where I don't know anyone is a good way to remember how sharing opinions can exclude alcoholics from AA. When I'm familiar and comfortable in an AA meeting, it's easy to assume everyone thinks like I do, and easy to ignore it when they don't.

I moved to a new town a few years ago, just as the country was in the middle of a divisive election that was spilling politics into nearly every aspect of American culture. The first meeting I attended had been invaded by the divisions of the time. I was 10 years sober, but I felt like a newcomer then. I didn't know anyone. I wanted an AA community. Instead, I found a culture war.

Fortunately I found another meeting that focused more on AA and less on members' irrelevant opinions. And by the time the pandemic came around, I started attending outdoor meetings all winter with those same divisive people who had (mostly) learned to keep their opinions away from meetings.

I moved to Norway in 2021 and have since been reminded of my need to stay vigilant in keeping my opinions and assumptions out of AA. One time I messed up. I mentioned a news headline from the United States during the pre-meeting chat. A few members of my group started talking about U.S. culture, a topic that would have seemed benign to me in this small group. But I know how it feels to sit silently in a meeting, fuming with disagreement—angry and isolated.

Dear A.A. Friends:

We are writing to provide an update regarding the forthcoming publication of the much-anticipated fifth edition of Alcoholics Anonymous. At the July 30 meeting of the A.A. World Services Board, the Publishing Committee recommended, and the full board approved, that the fifth edition hardcover be produced with a removable dust jacket and that a list price of $20 USD be adopted. We are on track with the production process to publish the hardcover of the fifth edition, updated with 26 new stories of recovery, in February 2027.

We share the Fellowship's excitement about the fifth edition of our beloved Big Book—coming more than 25 years after the publication of the fourth edition. More information about the publication of the fifth edition will follow this fall.

Warmly,

As two of the members immersed themselves in unsurprising criticisms of American society, I noticed a visitor in the back not saying anything. He stayed through the meeting, then quickly made his way out. I hope our discussion before the meeting didn't make him feel he was in the wrong place. I hope he was able to hear the AA message. I hope he stayed sober.

I always want to remember that one of the best things I can do for newcomers and all AAs is to keep my controversial opinions, and potentially controversial opinions, and the "facts" I know that might be controversial, as far away from AA as possible.
